Module 3
Workplace Policy, Practice and Culture: Employer and Employee Perspectives

Section I: Goals and Learning Objectives

Goals and Focus

The contents of this module have been prepared to address some of challenges associated with teaching about work-family issues from a human resource management and employment perspective.

The goals of this module are:
1. To develop an understanding that work-family policies are part of a human resource management system and the employment relationship.
2. To explain how work-family policies can be understood from both the individual employee and the organizational perspectives, which sometimes have competing tensions.
3. To develop an understanding of how the implementation of work-family policies, practices and culture link to support organizational effectiveness.
4. To promote familiarity with the different ways that employing organizations can support the work family relationship and different rationale for doing so.

The topics covered in this module include:

- Employer-sponsored work-family policies and programs
- Impact of work-family conflicts and supports on work outcomes
- Workplace culture
- Relationships with supervisors and co-workers
- Workplace flexibility
- Business cases for employer response to work-family issues
- Private versus public approaches for work and family supports

Student Learning Objectives

Students will:

- Understand how work-family issues can be viewed as business issues and part of the social employment relationship.
Become familiar with different types of employer responses to the work-life issues experienced by their employees.
Understand different explanations/rationales for why businesses adopt work-life policies and programs.
Understand that work-life programs emerge and develop in the workplace over time.
Understand that the concept of a “responsive workplace” goes beyond the adoption of family-friendly policies and programs to include culture and supervisor support.
Be able to operationalize workplace flexibility and think thoughtfully about policy implementation.
Understand that the U.S. approach to work and family is but one of many approaches across cultures.

Although the contents of this module have been developed for graduate level courses in professional schools, faculty members could adapt different sections of the module for undergraduate classes.

As prepared, the content of this module could be covered in three, 1 ½ or 2 hour class sessions. The assignment(s) could be completed after the completion of the module.
Module 3
Workplace Policy, Practice and Culture: Employer and Employee Perspectives

Section II: Class Sessions

Introduction

The content of this module has been divided into 3 class sessions.

Class 1 presents:
- insights about the competing tensions between employee and employer for time and energy;
- explanations of how work-family policies can be understood from both the individual employee and the organizational perspectives;
- types of work-life policies/programs; and
- rationale for and illustrations of how work and family policies are part of a human resource management system and the employment relationship.

Class 2 presents:
- understandings of how the implementation of work-family policies, practices and culture link to support organizational effectiveness; and
- examples of the different ways that employing organizations can support the work family relationship and different rationale for doing so.

Class 3 helps students apply and use the concepts from Class 1 and 2 in ‘real world’ settings:
- The Work Life Policy Business Case Exercise helps students learn to make the business case for adopting policies at their college and learn the challenges of doing so.
- The Work-Life Strategy Game helps students develop a work life strategy that fits their industry and workforce and gain familiarity with policies as well as managing work-life issues that fit with their strategy.

Class 1: The Dual Perspective and Competing Tensions of Work-Family Policies

Class Lecture Topics

The topics covered in Class 1 include:
1. The employer-employee collision course over time and energy
2. Types of work-life policies and programs
3. Human Resources response to and support for work and family life balance

Key Concepts:

- Overwork
- Time/energy imbalance
- Work-family conflict
- Workplace flexibility

  - However, such policies may be:
    - Ineffective
    - Under-utilized; not support by culture
    - Not well linked to work design and processes

- Information
  - E.g. college search advice, support groups, resource & referral for care

- Money

- Job design and working conditions (e.g., stress, night jobs etc.)

C. Organizational Work –Family Culture, Climate & Norms

- The primacy of work compared to nonwork demands in employee’s time
- Whether one can share concerns about family at work
- Whether one must sacrifice one’s family time to do well on the job
- The degree to which work and family should be separated from each other
- Whether work- life issues are an individual or collective concern

Language as Culture: Work-Family or Work-Life

- Work-life suggests that all employees, even those without a family, can have stress in meshing work and personal life

Organizational Culture vs. National Culture on Work-Family Policies

Key Points

- Organizational culture is distinct from national culture but in global firms powerful national cultures can influence work cultures.
- The U.S. tends to place greater emphasis on private employer support of work and family whereas many other developed nations tend to emphasize public support.

Gap Between Rhetoric and Reality

- Many firms have cultures where using work/life policies is seen as benefiting the individual far more than the firm. Meeting employee’s personal needs are not yet seen as meeting customers’ needs.
- Work/life policies are still largely programmatic
  - minimal link to other HR policies
  - nominal focus on informal cultural issues
  - glass ceiling effect

Class 2: Implementing work-family policies, practices and culture as a link to support organizational effectiveness and work-family relationships

Class Lecture Topics

The topics covered in Class 2 include:
1. linking work-life policies, practices and culture to organizational effectiveness; and
2. ways that employing organizations can support the work family relationship

Key Concepts:
- Managerial Concerns
- Family-Friendly Index
- Strategic HRM/Productivity
- Employer of Choice/Diversity Views
- Reciprocity
- Trade-Off
- Dual Agenda - Collaborative Interactive Action Research (CIAR)

Key Points

Work-life policies and practices are not distributed evenly across industry or position.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics (BLS), in the National Compensation Survey (NCS), reports on the percent of full and part-time employees in industry and state and local governments who have access to selected work-family programs by worker characteristics, establishment characteristics, and geographic location.

Faculty can find the full reports of these resources at:

“Family-Friendly Index”

“Family-Friendly Index” is a benchmarking tool for offering work-family policies and programs. Twenty-eight family-friendly policies are scored based on:

- impact of the policy on reducing work-family conflict;
- coverage, in terms of numbers of employees who have access to the policy;
- institutionalization—meaning whether or not the policy is formalized;
- commitment, which reflects the amount of resources, in terms of money, people, time, etc., needed to provide the policy;
- level of effort, which reflects how complex or difficult the policy is to implement; and
- innovativeness, which is the degree to which the policy or program has been implemented in the past.

Suggestions for Faculty

The BLS, in the National Compensation Survey (NCS), reports on the percent of full and part-time employees in industry and state and local governments who have access to selected work-family programs by worker characteristics, establishment characteristics, and geographic location.

Faculty can find the full reports of these resources at:

Stages in Organizational Development on Work and Family

See the following Sloan Work and Family
Key Points | Suggestions for Faculty
--- | ---
- Stage 1: Employer adopts a few work family policies on paper, but they are not integrated into the culture.
- Stage 2: Many policies and practices exist for different work–life needs, work-family professionals hired.
- Stage 3: Work family issues have strong cultural acceptance, managerial support, and work is designed with consideration for family life.

The Families and Work Institute identifies “three discernable stages” as a workplace organization recognizes and then responds to the work-family needs of employees.

Making the Business Case: Strategies of Selling

Management philosophies over support of work-life can vary
1. Strategic HRM / productivity
2. Employer of choice/ diversity views
3. Reciprocity
4. Trade-off
5. Dual agenda

Strategic HRM Views of Business Case

- What is economic performance of firms that provide work-life balance?
- Do the firms that provide the best work-life balance do better in the marketplace?
- Are they more profitable?
- Are employees of those firms more productive?
- Do these policies have a return on investment?
Key Points

Employer of Choice View
- “Best employers” typically receive twice as many job applications per position as other firms
- Example: Job applications received by Edward Jones & Company, named by Fortune as the #1 best employer to work for in 2002, 2003, up from 40,000 to 400,000 after on list
- Best practice: Marketing work life as best employer competency

Tradeoff View
- Productivity pitted against leisure
- Outdated traditional paradigms: Worker time for money; Work vs. family
- Best practice: How to redesign jobs for mutual benefits for managing work-life

Reciprocity Managerial View
- Workers will give more discretionary performance when the employer is supportive.
- Example: Employees who rated work life benefits useful are significantly more likely to make voluntary workplace improvement suggestions.
- Best practice: Implementing work-family benefits that workers value.

Collaborative Interactive Action Research (CIAR): Three Pronged Approach Dual Agenda
- Engagement at the workplace level
  - Employers, employees
- Engagement at the associational level
  - Unions, professional organizations, trade associations, community groups

Suggestions for Faculty
  - Stock performance of Working Mother 100 Best companies is consistently higher.
  - Why? 35 %of analyst’s ‘investment decision’ is determined by non-financial information.
  - “Ability to attract & retain people”.
  - Workforce is increasingly diverse; want talent of all backgrounds to want to work for you.

Work-life strategy game

Support of work-life integration: Cultural issues facing the employer

WORK/LIFE STRATEGY GAME

This game is used with permission from Towers Perrin. Joanne Harney is thanked for her efforts in helping Professor Kossek get approval to use the game in the book: Managing Human Resources in the 21st Century: From Core Concepts to Strategic Choices, edited by Ellen Kossek and Richard Block. South-Western College Publishing, 2000.

OBJECTIVE

To accumulate the highest monetary value by the end of the Game. Value is accrued by answering WORK/LIFE and MANAGEMENT questions correctly and purchasing work/life programs most related to the organization’s business needs and strategy, as well as by chance, as revealed in NEWSFLASH and MEMO cards. Dollars not invested by the end of play contribute to total value.
